The Blockhouse, which was loopholed, was the key of the enemy's position. Seeing no Officer of the storming party near, and being anxious that the place should be taken immediately, as any protracted resistance might have caused the main body of the Bhootese to rally, the British Force having been fighting in a boiling sun on very steep and difficult ground for upwards of three hours, the General in command ordered these two Officers [Captain Trevor, and Lieut. J. Duudas, R. Engineers (since dead)] to show the way into the Blockhouse. They had to climb up a wall which was fourteen feet high, and then to enter a house, occupied by some 200 desperate men, head foremost through an opening not more than two feet wide between the top of the wall and the roof of the Blockhouse. Major General Tombs states that on speaking to the Sikh soldiers around him, and telling them in Hindoostani to swarm up the wall, none of them responded to the call until these two Officers had shown them the way, when they followed with the greatest alacrity. They then retreated to a shed a few yards from it, and in this place continued to defend themselves for more than twenty-two hours, till relieved. At last, only six men and Mr. Home remained to fire. Of four officers who were with the party, all were badly wounded, and three are since dead. The conduct of the defence during the latter part of the time devolved, therefore, on Mr. Home, and to his active exertions previously to being forced into the house, and his

Captain Holmes, Captain McRae, and others proceeded to the spot, and let down a well rope of sufficient length to reach the soldier, and capable of sustaining him for a time. Both Captain McRae and Captain Holmes volunteered to go down, but as the former was a light weight it was decided that he should make the trial, Captain Holmes demurring, as he wished to undertake the risk himself. The rope being very weak, it could not possibly have borne Captain Holmes's great weight. Captain McRae was accordingly let down by means of a four-strand tent rope, and on reaching the water found the soldier practically insensible; he therefore decided to go up with him. Captain Holmes was at the head of the rope, and his strength enabled him to lift both completely. After hauling up about 10 or 12 feet, the rope broke, precipitating Captain McRae and his charge to the bottom of the well. A second attempt was made, and both were brought to the surface. The depth of the well was 88 feet, of which 12 feet was water. It was quite dark at the time. With reference to this case, the following divisional order by the Duke of Connaught was issued to the troops in his command:—"His Royal Highness the Major General Commanding, having been made acquainted with the circumstances connected with the rescue from drowning in a well at Rawul Pindee of Trumpeter S. Mehan, R.A., desires to record in divisional orders his deep sense of the devotion and gallantry displayed on the occasion by Captains McRae and Holmes, 45th Sikhs, and to convey to those officers his warm appreciation of their conduct, which reflects the greatest credit upon themselves, their regiment, and Her Majesty's service generally. Hills was on picket duty, with two guns, at the mound to the right of the camp. About 11 o'clock a.m. there was a rumour that the enemy's cavalry were coming down on his post. Lieutenant Hills proceeded to take up the position assigned in case of alarm, but, before he reached the spot, he saw the enemy close upon his guns before they had time to form up. To enable him to do this he boldly charged, single-handed, the head of the enemy's column, cut down the first man, struck the second, and was then ridden down, horse and all. On getting up and searching for his sword, three more men came at him (two mounted); the first man he wounded with his pistol; he caught the lance of the second in his left hand, and wounded him with his sword; the first man then came on again, and was cut down; the third man (on foot) then came up, and wrenched the sword from Lieutenant Hills, who fell in the struggle, and the enemy was about to cut him down when Major Tombs, who had gone up to visit his two guns, saw what was going on, rushed in and shot the man and saved Lieutenant Hills. By this time the enemy's cavalry had passed by, and Major Tombs and Lieutenant Hills went to look after the wounded men, when one of the enemy passed with Lieutenant Hills' pistol; he first cut at Lieutenant Hills who parried the blow, and he then turned on Major Tombs, who received the blow in the same manner. His second attack on the Lieutenant was more successful, as he was cut down with a bad sword-cut on the head, and would have been, no doubt, killed, had not Major Tombs rushed in and put his sword through the man."—Extract from Despatch of Lt.
